HIGH COURT (KUALA LUMPUR) — ORIGINATING PETITION NO
D1–26–56 OF 2004
VINCENT NG J
14 MARCH 2007

B

Civil Procedure — Affidavits — Cross-examination of deponent to affidavit — Affidavits in reply to application for committal — Application by plaintiff to cross-examine deponent — Whether application to cross-examine should be allowed

C

The petitioner filed this petition under s 181 of the Companies Act 1965. The petitioner then filed an application for leave to make an application for an order of committal for contempt of court against the second and fourth respondents on the grounds that the second respondent had willfully and intentionally made false and misleading statements in his affidavits and against the fourth respondent for affirming an affidavit wherein he adopts the contents of the second respondent's affidavits and for authorizing the second respondent to affirm certain affidavits. Soon thereafter the petitioner made this application under O 38 r 2(3) of the Rules of the High Court 1980 and/or under the inherent powers of the court for leave to cross-examine the second and fourth respondents on all the related affidavits to enable the court to decide whether the respondents have committed contempt of court

Held, dismissing the application:

- (1) To prove an offence of criminal contempt the petitioner would have to establish or clinch three essential ingredients namely: (i) the statement deposed to is in fact false and misleading (actus reus); (ii) the statement was intended to be false and misleading (mens rea); and, (iii) the statement was made with the actual or inevitable intention or consequence of frustrating or obstructing the administration of justice or interferes with or impedes the administration of justice. (see para 10).
- (2) On the question whether leave to cross-examine could be allowed on 'contempt affidavits', due to the grave penal consequences which may result from the court's finding against the said respondents, the court agrees and adopt the views of Lord Denning MR in Comet Products UK Ltd v Hawkes Plastics Ltd & Anor [1971] 2 QB 67. A man who is charged with contempt of court cannot be compelled to answer interrogatories or to give evidence himself to make him prove his guilt. The second and fourth respondents are not compellable witnesses in this contempt proceedings, unless they choose to do so (see para 11).

I

- A (3) In any event, to allow the petitioner to cross-examine the respondents on encl 182A or any of the previous affidavits would operate unfairly and would be prejudicial against the alleged contemnor as it would be difficult to restrict such cross-examination to only the circumstances of the committal hearing so as to ensure that such exercise would not be for a collateral purpose.
- B Unrestricted cross-examination would have little relevance to the petitioner's allegations of contempt and would be severely prejudicial to the said respondents since it would lead to an examination of the whole circumstance of the petition itself (see para 12).
- C (4) The petitioner's application for cross-examination did not sufficiently define or limit the scope of the cross-examination. From the written submission of counsel for the petitioner it also appeared probable that the petitioner would take advantage of this proposed cross-examination to fish for evidence to support his principal non-contempt applications such as encls 1 and 10. This made it very likely that the proposed cross-examination would lead to an investigation of the whole of the circumstances of the re-amended petition, and if this happened the cross-examination would be for a collateral purpose (see para 14).
- E (5) This court should exercise extreme caution in the conduct of these committal proceedings lest the respondents' rights to a fair hearing are impeded. And hence, the petitioner must show a greater necessity and stronger grounds for cross-examining the respondents in these committal proceedings than is normally required to cross-examine deponents in ordinary applications (see para 16).
- F (6) A 'preliminary hearing' on all the facts and circumstances of this petition will greatly prejudice the respondents when the same is tried. It is unjust to allow the petitioner to have two bites of the cherry. The submission that the said respondents are compellable witnesses in the contempt proceedings against them has, in justice, to be rejected (see para 17).
- G (7) Cross-examination is not essential as the facts and circumstances in these allegations of contempt add little weight to the issues that have to be decided at the committal hearing. As can be seen from the parties' affidavits, there are no major disputes as to facts and circumstances. The committal hearing by and large involves disputes on points of law (see para 18(2)).
- H (8) By cross-examining the respondents on the contempt affidavit, the petitioner will require this court to decide on issues raised in the six previous affidavits prior to the hearing of the respective applications in respect of which they were filed. This predetermination of the issues will be prejudicial to the respondents, and is akin to placing the cart before the horse (see para 18(4)).
- I (9) The application for cross-examination did not identify the issues for which the petitioner alleges cross-examination is necessary. In his application, the petitioner says that he 'disputes and or challenges' the respondents' affidavits, and that there are 'contradictions' between the affidavits, and the said respondents' explanations are 'bare statements'. However, the petitioner does not in his application or in his affidavit in support (encl 185) elaborate any further, or refer to specific paragraphs in the said respondents' affidavits or to specific documents. The petitioner, in (encl 185) gives other ambiguous and indefinite reasons for wanting to cross-examine the said respondents, but has not explained in reasonable detail or stated his basis for requiring cross-examination (see para 22).

A

- (10) Though it is clear that the petitioner is disputing certain facts, yet he has failed to show how these disputes are relevant to the committal application. Accordingly, the purpose of the proposed cross-examination remains questionable. In order to prove perjury, the petitioner must first of all prove that the alleged contemptuous statements are in fact false and misleading and he must discharge this burden of proof on the affidavit and documentary evidence that is already available and which has been referred to by him. The petitioner cannot simply level allegations against the said respondents and then attempt to elicit oral evidence by compelling the said respondents to disprove his allegations (see para 23).

- (11) The court should be slow to allow the cross-examination of the respondents on the grounds that the affidavits filed in interlocutory proceedings allegedly contain misleading information. This is because such a decision would set a dangerous precedent for our courts by opening the floodgates for similar strategies to be adopted by litigants even in cases such as urgent injunction applications. Surely, to condone or to approve of this strategy would severely impair the court's viability in the administration of justice. Hundreds of affidavits are filed in our courts everyday, most of which contain statements of facts which are in dispute. If litigants could file motions for contempt founded on contents of affidavits and then allowed to cross-examine the deponent on such affidavits, our courts would be bogged down with contempt proceedings rather than have the true and substantial relief sought litigated (see para 25).

Pempetisyen telah memfailkan petisyen ini di bawah s 181 Akta Syarikat 1965. Pempetisyen kemudiannya memfailkan satu permohonan untuk kebenaran membuat permohonan bagi satu perintah komital kerana menghina mahkamah terhadap responden kedua dan keempat atas alasan bahawa responden kedua telah secara sukarela dan dengan niat membuat pernyataan palsu dan keliru dalam affidavitnya dan terhadap responden kedua kerana mengikrarkan affidavit di dalamnya beliau telah mengambil isi kandungan affidavit responden kedua dan membenarkan responden kedua mengikrarkan affidavit-afidavit tertentu. Tidak lama kemudian pempetisyen membuat permohonan ini di bawah A 38 k 2(3) Kaedah-kaedah Mahkamah Tinggi 1980 dan/atau di bawah kuasa-kuasa sedia ada mahkamah untuk kebenaran memeriksa balas responden kedua dan keempat ke atas affidavit-afidavit yang berkaitan bagi membolehkan mahkamah membuat keputusan sama ada responden-responden telah melakukan penghinaan mahkamah.

I

Diputuskan, menolak permohonan:

- (1) Bagi membuktikan kesalahan penghinaan jenayah pempetisyen hendaklah mengadakan atau mendapatkan tiga keperluan yang dinamakan; (i) kenyataan

- A yang dideposkan adalah sebenarnya palsu dan mengelirukan (actus reus); (ii) kenyataan adalah diniatkan sebagai palsu dan mengelirukan (mens rea); dan (iii) kenyataan telah dibuat dengan niat yang sebenar atau tidak dapat dielakkan atau kesan daripada kekecewaan atau menghalang pentadbiran keadilan atau mencampuri dengan atau mengganggu pentadbiran keadilan (lihat perenggan 10).
- B
- C (2) Kepada persoalan sama ada kebenaran untuk memeriksa balas akan dibenarkan ke atas 'afidavit menghina', dengan sebab kesan-kesan berkanun yang berat berikutan daripada keputusan-keputusan mahkamah terhadap responden tersebut, mahkamah bersetuju dan menggunakan pendekatan Lord Denning MR dalam Comet Products UK Ltd v Hawkes Plastics Ltd & Anor [1971] 2 QB 67. Seseorang yang dituduh kerana menghina mahkamah tidak boleh dipaksa untuk menjawab sebarang soal siasat atau memberikan keterangan untuk membuktikan dirinya sebagai bersalah. Responden kedua dan keempat adalah bukan saksi yang dipaksa dan prosiding menghina ini, melainkan mereka memilih untuk berbuat demikian (lihat perenggan 11).
- D
- E (3) Dalam setiap keadaan, untuk membenarkan pempetisyen memeriksa balas responden-responden dalam lampiran 182A atau affidavit-afidavit lepas akan menyebabkan ketidakadilan dan akan memprejudiskan terhadap orang menghina yang telah dituduh kerana ia menjadi susah untuk menghadkan pemeriksaan balas tersebut kepada hanya keadaan-keadaan dalam pendengaran komital bagi memastikan amalan itu tidak menjadi tujuan yang kolateral. Pemeriksaan balas yang tidak dihadkan akan menjadi sedikit relevan kepada dakwaan menghina pempetisyen dan secara berasingannya akan memprejudiskan kepada responden tersebut memandangkan ia akan membawa kepada pemeriksaan menyeluruh petisyen itu sendiri (lihat perenggan 12).
- F
- G (4) Permohonan pempetisyen untuk pemeriksaan balas tidak sepatutnya membataskan atau menghadkan lingkungan pemeriksaan balas. Daripada hujahan bertulis peguamcara pempetisyen ia juga besar kemungkinan pempetisyen akan mengambil kesempatan ke atas pemeriksaan balas ini untuk memancing keterangan bagi menyokong permohonan-permohonan utama yang tiada kena-mengena dengan penghinaan seperti lampiran 1 dan 10. Ini akan menjadikan pemeriksaan balas yang dicadangkan akan membawa kepada penyiasatan kepada keseluruhan keadaan kepada petisyen pindaan semula, dan jika ini terjadi pemeriksaan balas akan menjadi tujuan yang kolateral (lihat perenggan 14).
- H
- I (5) Mahkamah ini sepatutnya mengamalkan sikap berhati-hati yang amat sangat dalam perkara prosiding komital ini jangan sampai menghalang hak-hak responden untuk pendengaran yang adil. Dan dengan itu, pempetisyen hendaklah menunjukkan keperluan yang amat besar dan alasan-alasan yang kukuh untuk memeriksa balas responden-responden dalam prosiding komital ini daripada hanya keperluan biasa untuk pemeriksaan balas deponen-deponen dalam permohonan-permohonan biasa (lihat perenggan 16).
- (6) Satu 'pendengaran permulaan' ke atas semua fakta-fakta dan keadaan-keadaan petisyen ini akan banyak memprejudiskan responden-responden bila perkara

- yang sama dibicarakan. Ia adalah tidak adil untuk membenarkan pempetisyen mendapat dua kali peluang. Hujahan bahawa responden-responden adalah saksi-saksi yang boleh dipaksa dalam prosiding penghinaan terhadap mereka adalah, demi keadilan, hendaklah ditolak (lihat perenggan 17). A
- (7) Pemeriksaan balas adalah tidak perlu kerana fakta-fakta dan keadaan-keadaan dalam dakwaan penghinaan ini menambah sedikit pertimbangan kepada isu-isu yang telah diputuskan pada pendengaran komital. Seperti yang dapat dilihat daripada affidavit pihak-pihak, tiada pertikaian besar kepada fakta-fakta dan keadaan-keadaan. Pendengaran komital sebilangan besarnya melibatkan perkara perundangan (lihat perenggan 18(2)). B
- (8) Dengan memeriksa balas responden-responden untuk affidavit penghinaan, pempetisyen memerlukan mahkamah ini memutuskan ke atas isu-isu yang dibangkitkan dalam enam affidavit lepas sebelum pendengaran permohonan-permohonan yang dimaksudkan bagi sebab ianya difailkan. Penentuan semula untuk isu-isu ini sudah tentu akan memprejudiskan responden-responden, dan seperti meletakkan pedati di hadapan seekor kuda (lihat perenggan 18(4)). C D
- (9) Permohonan untuk pemeriksaan balas tidak mengenalpasti isu-isu yang mana pempetisyen mendakwa pemeriksaan balas adalah perlu. Dalam permohonannya, pempetisyen mengatakan bahawa beliau 'mempertikaikan dan/atau mencabar' affidavit-afidavit responden, dan bahawa terdapat 'percanggahan' di antara affidavit-afidavit, dan penjelasan responden adalah 'kenyataan kosong'. Walaubagaimanapun, pempetisyen tidak dalam permohonannya atau dalam affidavit sokongannya (lampiran 185) memperincikan selanjutnya, atau merujuk kepada perenggan-perenggan khusus dalam affidavit responden tersebut atau dokumen-dokumen khusus. Pempetisyen, dalam (lampiran 185) memberikan sebab-sebab yang kabur dan tidak jelas yang memerlukan pemeriksaan balas responden-responden tersebut, tetapi tidak menerangkan dalam butiran-butiran yang munasabah atau menyatakan sebabnya untuk keperluan pemeriksaan balas. (lihat perenggan 22). E F
- (10) Walaupun ia adalah jelas bahawa pempetisyen mempertikaikan fakta-fakta tertentu, beliau masih lagi gagal menunjukkan bagaimana pertikaian-pertikaian ini adalah relevan kepada permohonan komital. Seterusnya, tujuan untuk pemeriksaan balas yang dicadangkan masih lagi menjadi persoalan. Bagi membuktikan sumpah-bohong, pempetisyen mestilah pertama sekali membuktikan kesemuanya bahawa kenyataan-kenyataan yang menghina adalah sebenarnya salah dan keliru dan beliau hendaklah melepaskan beban pembuktian ke atas affidavit dan keterangan dokumentari yang telah tersedia dan telah dirujuk olehnya. Pempetisyen tidak boleh menyamakan dakwaan terhadap responden-responden tersebut dan kemudiannya cuba untuk mencungkil keterangan lisan dengan memaksa responden-responden tersebut untuk tidak membuktikan dakwaan-dakwaannya (lihat perenggan 23). G H
- (11) Mahkamah hendaklah tidak mudah memberikan kebenaran pemeriksaan balas responden-responden atas alasan-alasan bahawa affidavit-afidavit yang difailkan I

- A dalam prosiding interlokutori didakwa mengandungi maklumat yang mengelirukan. Ini adalah kerana keputusan seperti itu akan menjadi contoh ikutan yang berbahaya untuk mahkamah-mahkamah kita dengan membuka lebih banyak peluang untuk strategi-strategi yang sama yang akan digunakan oleh litigan-litigan walaupun dalam kes-kes seperti permohonan-permohonan injunksi yang segera. Semestinya, untuk membiarkan atau membenarkan strategi ini akan merosakkan secara besar-besaran kebolehan mahkamah dalam pentadbiran keadilan. Beratus-ratus affidavit akan difailkan dalam mahkamah kita setiap hari, sebilangan besarnya mengandungi kenyataan-kenyataan fakta yang dipertikaikan. Jika litigan-litigan boleh memfailkan usul-usul untuk penghinaan berdasarkan kandungan affidavit-afidavit dan kemudiannya dibenarkan untuk memeriksa balas deponen affidavit-afidavit tersebut, mahkamah kita akan dipenuhi dengan prosiding penghinaan daripada mempunyai relief yang sepatutnya dan penting untuk dilitigasikan (lihat perenggan 25).]

Vincent Ng J:

[1] Now before me is an application by the petitioner under encl 186 for leave to cross-examine the second and fourth respondents at the hearing of the notice of motion (encl 178) for contempt. Because the principal purpose of the above petition, which is encompassed in encls 1 and 10, seem to have taken some inordinate time to resolve with finality, perhaps it is appropriate here to set out the myriad applications (a record number in my court or other courts, for that matter) that have been filed by both sides in relation to the petition. The various applications with their enclosure numbers and nature of application are here set out and tabulated as follows:

[2] In encls 12, 16, 18 and 20, the first to fifth respondents applied for security for costs in the aggregate sum of RM2,900,000 in respect of all the respondents, on the grounds that the petitioner resides in the United States and has no assets in Malaysia save for the shares that he holds in the first respondent company. The further grounds being that the third respondent resides in Singapore whilst the fourth respondent resides in Taiwan and has to travel therefrom to attend the hearing of the various proceedings here in Kuala Lumpur. Enclosures 12, 16, 18 and 20 was first heard before the senior assistant registrar ('SAR') of the High Court, who on 18 March 2005 and on 15 April 2005 allowed an aggregate sum of RM950,000 as security for costs. An appeal was then lodged by both sides to the Judge in chambers, and on 22 June 2005 after hearing arguments on both sides, I reduced the aggregate quantum of the security for costs in respect of all the respondents from RM950,000 to RM390,000 to be deposited into the joint solicitors' accounts of both parties; with my brief grounds marked encl 106 (as set out in my Judge's Notes) read out to the parties when I delivered my decision. Being unhappy with my decision the respondents lodged notices of appeal dated 18 July 2005 (by fourth respondent), 19 July 2005 (by first and second respondents), 20 July 2005 (by third respondent) and 20 July 2005 (by fifth respondent) to the Court of Appeal. Pending the outcome of this appeal, the respondents applied (under encls 114, 116, 120 and 121) for a stay of the hearing of encls 1 and 10. On 31 October 2005 I refused the stay as I was concerned that the principal purpose of the petitioner's petition in encls 1 and 10 should be disposed of with reasonable promptitude.

[3] Then, to the surprise of this court and delight of the respondents, something remarkable happened. The petitioner applied under encls 162 and 170 for leave to make an application for an order of committal for criminal contempt of court — against the second respondent upon the grounds that the petitioner had 'willfully and intentionally made false and misleading statements in his affidavit affirmed on 3 October 2004 (encl 14) read together with his affidavits affirmed on 19 August 2005 (encl 127) and on 18 November 2005 (encl 147)', and against the fourth respondent for affirming an affidavit on 16 November 2004 (encl 28) wherein he adopted the contents of the second respondent's affidavit (encl 14) and for having authorised the second respondent to affirm encls 127 and 147. For ease of reference the second and fourth respondents shall be referred to as the 'said respondents'. Leave to make the said application was granted by me on 15 March 2006. Soon thereafter the petitioner made an application (encl 186), now before me, for leave to cross-examine the said respondents on all the related affidavits. The respondents then contended that despite the fact that this court had refused the stay of hearing on encls 1 and 10 when they had appealed to the Court of Appeal against my decision which allowed a reduction of the aggregate quantum of security for costs to RM390,000, now in the face of the petitioner's current ongoing proceedings to have the said respondents committed for contempt of court, all other proceedings in the petition ought to be stayed pending the decision of this court on criminal contempt.

[4] Counsel for the said respondents cited the Supreme Court case of Wee Choo Keong v MBf Holdings Bhd & Anor and another appeal [1993] 2 MLJ 217 (Wee Choo Keong). With this remarkable change of circumstances I found myself in agreement with this contention of the respondents' counsel Mr Mah Weng Kwai, and my reasons are here set out.

- (a) I am mindful of the distinction that, unlike the instant case, in Wee Choo Keong it was the alleged contemptnor who was obliged by the court to first purge his alleged contempt, if any, before he could proceed with his application to set aside the injunction which resulted in the contempt proceedings. Yet simple logic dictates that, where it is trite law that a charge of contempt such as in the applications under encls 162 and 170 for criminal contempt ('contempt applications') would have to be determined upon the higher beyond-reasonable-doubt test applicable to criminal cases (be it for criminal or civil contempt) whereas civil non-contempt applications ('non-contempt applications') such as the petitioner's other applications, which includes encls 1 and 10 ('the petitioner's other applications') would be governed by the lower civil balance-of-probability test, this court should proceed first to deal with the more serious charge of contempt as it would entail considerations of the said respondents credibility on their affidavits in respect of the petition and other non-contempt applications.
- (b) Should I decide otherwise, it would open floodgates which would enable a litigant who makes any application in civil proceedings to seek to have the opponent charged for contempt of court due to certain allegedly false depositions in the affidavit(s) in opposition, as soon as the party resists the litigant's application, and yet insists that his initial application be first heard. For this reason the ploy of instituting criminal applications which pertains to civil applications while the civil applications are pending disposal should be frowned upon by the court.
- (c) It was the petitioner who had thought it fit or to adopt this strategy of instituting contempt proceedings against the said respondents even before any of the petitioner's applications could be heard. I have also to take note of the fact that the petitioner's counsel has not been able to locate any case authorities to counter my above rationale for accepting Mr Mah's contention.
- (d) If this court is to first proceed to dispose of any of the petitioner's civil applications (say encl 10 or encl 1) where the lower civil standard of proof has to be applied, and should it decide in favour of the said respondents, the court

A would have also virtually predetermined in favour of the said respondents on the criminal applications — that must be proved with the same degree of satisfaction as in a criminal charge – even before hearing the same.

B [5] Now before me is the application (encl 186) by the applicant/petitioner under O 38 r 2(3) of the Rules of the High Court 1980 ('RHC') and or under the inherent powers of the court for leave to cross-examine the affiants (said respondents in the above s 181 petition) on the affidavits affirmed by the second respondent on 4 May 2006 to enable this court to decide whether they have committed criminal contempt of court. A criminal contempt is one which takes place in the face of the court, or which prejudices a fair trial. It includes acts which obstruct or tend to obstruct or interfere with the administration of justice. A civil contempt, otherwise known as contempt in procedure, takes place upon disobedience of an order made by the court in a civil action. Even a civil contempt which partakes of the nature of a criminal charge, is governed by the same standard of proof as in an ordinary criminal case as the contemnor may be sent to prison. The petitioner's allegation that the said respondents have made false and misleading statements in encl 182A and in the six other previous affidavits is an allegation of criminal contempt.

E [6] It was only when encl 186 first came up for hearing that counsel for the petitioner then identified in full, the following seven affidavits (inclusive of encl 182A) on which cross-examination of the said respondents were sought, namely:

- F (a) Hendrik's affidavit affirmed on 3 October 2004 (encl 14);
- (b) Le's affidavit affirmed on 16 November 2004 (encl 28) — fourth respondent;
- (c) Hendrik's affidavit verifying list of documents affirmed on 28 December 2004 (encl 31);
- G (d) Hendrik's affidavit affirmed on 19 August 2005 (encl 127);
- (e) Hendrik's affidavit affirmed on 18 November 2005 (encl 147);
- (f) Hendrik's affidavit affirmed on 21 December 2005 (encl 156); (all six affidavits referred to by respondent as 'previous affidavits') and
- (g) Hendrik's affidavit affirmed on 4 May 2006 (encl 182A) affirmed by second respondent 'in response to the committal proceedings initiated against him' to oppose encl 178, (subsequently identified by the petitioner as 'the contempt affidavit').

H [7] Enclosure 186 is a simple application, in respect of which extensive written submissions have been tendered to this court by both counsel, wherein intricate though convoluted arguments were advanced by counsel of the applicant/petitioner. However, this court should not fail to see the wood for the trees and not grasp the real issue for determination. The real focus ought to be, in my view:

I (a) on the depositions of which particular affidavit or affidavits does the applicant seek the court's leave to have the said respondents cross-examined for the specific purpose of affixing to or to nail them for criminal contempt for want of a better term to use in my analysis I would call this specie of Affidavits 'contempt affidavits'; the other specie being 'non-contempt affidavits'; and, (b) what guidelines should this court adopt to determine whether to allow such leave. As the applicant has not identified with unequivocal clarity which is (are) the 'contempt affidavit(s)' concerned, I had to request for clarification for the purpose of identifying the contempt affidavits among the seven affidavits. On 10 January 2007 and 6 February 2007 the applicant's counsel identified the contempt affidavit, in respect of which citation for contempt was founded, as encl 182A, which was affirmed by the second respondent on behalf of himself and on behalf of the fourth respondent. And that, the latter was sought to be made liable because he had authorised the second respondent to affirm encl 182A on his behalf (though notably, the third and fifth respondents had also authorised the second respondent to affirm encl 182A). This attempt at clarification had merely increased brain activity without enhancement of intellectual illumination.

[8] The reason is this. Though the 'contempt affidavit' was subsequently identified by the applicant as encl 182A, yet this court should not fail to see that the real and sole purpose of the leave sought to cross-examine on all of the six aforelisted previous affidavits vis-à-vis encl 182A is to enable the court to find the second and fourth respondents in contempt and thus liable to penal sanctions. This must essentially and incontrovertibly be so. The pertinent question to ask is: to what purpose is cross-examination required on the other six previous affidavits besides encl 182A? Is it to demonstrate that contempt has been committed in affidavit 182A? Then, the con-committent question is: whether the alleged lies or falsities had occurred in any of the six previous affidavits but not in encl 182A, and conversely, whether the 'false and misleading statements' had occurred in encl 182A but not in any of the six previous affidavits. Furthermore, if the focus is on encl 182A, I am not able to fathom how the fourth respondent could be found in contempt merely for instructing or authorising the second respondent to depose to certain facts in encl 182A when he had not sworn the impugned affidavit. Only the affidavit marked as encl 28 was affirmed by the fourth respondent wherein he had merely adopted the contents of the second respondent's affidavit in encl 14. Mindful that encl 182A was not affirmed by the fourth respondent, the alleged falsities, even if found to be so, are not affirmations on oath by him and this court could not commit the fourth respondent for contempt. Consequently, in this state of utter confusion this court is driven to err on the side of caution and, I now hold that because all the seven affidavits are so inextricably linked together I am bound to consider all the seven affidavits as contempt affidavits, and be guided by the ratio in case authorities pertaining to leave to cross-examine on such specie of affidavits. For this court to divide the seven affidavits and to compartmentalise them into separate species of affidavits for the purpose of application of different principles in its determination would be to take flight from the reality of the situation. In any event, it is appropriate here to observe that everything deposed to by the said respondents in their affidavits constituted an indelible record of their case which the applicant could still avail himself during normal cross-examination when the s 181 petition is tried.

[9] I think the essence of the respondent's submission is that (though not so expressed), leave to allow cross-examination on the specie of affidavits that does not attract penal consequences require different considerations from leave to allow cross-examination on affidavits that attract penal consequences being the contempt affidavits. And, that the contents of the contempt affidavit [encl 182A] are very

- A closely connected to those of the six previous affidavits. If the affidavits are to be divided into contempt and non-contempt affidavits I agree with counsel for the applicant that in respect of the non-contempt affidavits — being encls 14, 28, 31, 127, 147 and 156 — and based on a welter of authorities cited by him, leave to cross-examine the deponent on such affidavits would normally be allowed.
- B The proviso, in my view, is that certain conditions that were authoritatively laid down in Indrani Rajaratnam v Fairview Schools Bhd [2001] 4 MLJ 56 (Court of Appeal) must be met. And obviously, such exercise would not lead to a citation for contempt, which is criminal in nature and necessitate different considerations, as it entails penal consequences due to its quasi criminal aspect.

- C [10] Though it is not quite a pertinent consideration for the present purpose, yet the trite law to be noted is that a criminal and civil contempt of court is an offence of a criminal character or in nature of a criminal charge, and as such it must be proved beyond reasonable doubt (see Re Bramblevale Ltd [1970] Ch 128 and Tay Seng Keng v Tay EK Seng Co Sdn Bhd [1978] 1 MLJ 126 (Fed Ct). (See also the decision of this court in E & E Equipment Sdn Bhd v Speci Avenue (M) Sdn Bhd & Ors [2004] 3 MLJ 49). To prove an offence of criminal contempt the petitioner would have to establish or clinch three essential ingredients namely: (i) the statement deposed to is in fact false and misleading (actus reus); (ii) the statement was intended to be false and misleading (mens rea); and, (iii) the statement was made with the actual or inevitable intention or consequence of frustrating or obstructing the administration of justice or interferes with or impedes the administration of justice, see Jaginder Singh & Ors v Attorney-General [1983] 1 MLJ 71, Yee Sang Metal [2002] HKCU 1255 (High Court of Hong Kong), R v Christopher Charles Murfett [2004] VSC 160 (Supreme Court of Victoria), and Halsbury's Laws of England (4th Ed) Vol 9(1) pp 242–243.

- [11] On the question whether leave to cross-examine could be allowed on 'contempt affidavits', due to the grave penal consequences which may result from the court's finding against the said respondents, I am ad idem with and I would adopt the views of Lord Denning MR in Comet Products UK Ltd v Hawkex Plastics Ltd & Anor [1971] 2 QB 67 ('Comet Products'). Though this authority is not binding on this court, the rationale therein was so cogently argued by Lord Denning that it is compelling on me to follow:
- G

- H At the end of the first day both parties anticipated that the cross-examination would proceed on the following day. But overnight Mr Sherrard, who had been looking into the position, took objection to the cross-examination of Mr Hawkins being allowed. He argued that it was in the nature of a criminal proceeding and that he should not be compelled to submit himself to cross-examination on his affidavit. In answer to this submission, Mr Sparrow told the judge that he did not wish to cross-examine upon the subject of the main action. On being so told, the judge said that he would allow the cross-examination of Mr Hawkins. Mr Sherrard then said that he wished to appeal to this court. So the judge adjourned the case pending our decision. Mr Sherrard has now come to us. I think we should give him leave to appeal.
- I

This case raises questions of some importance. Mr. Sparrow submitted that in proceedings of this kind the defendant can be compelled to give evidence against himself. Mr Sparrow pointed out that this is a case of civil contempt and not criminal. The difference is well known.

A criminal contempt is one which takes place in the face of the court, or which prejudices a fair trial and so forth. A civil contempt is different. A typical case is disobedience to an order made by the court in a civil action.

I cannot accept Mr Sparrow's submission. Although this is a civil contempt, it partakes of the nature of a criminal charge. The defendant is liable to be punished for it. He may be sent to prison. The rules as to criminal charges have always been applied to such a proceeding. I see that Cross J in Yianni v Yianni [1966] 1 WLR 120 so decided; and furthermore we ourselves in this court in In Re Bramblevale Ltd [1970] Ch 128, p 137, said that it must be proved with the same degree of satisfaction as in a criminal charge. It follows that the accused is not bound to give evidence unless he choose to do so. In this connection I quote what Bowen LJ said in Redfern v Redfern [1891] P 139, p 147:

It is one of the inveterate principles of English law that a party cannot be compelled to discover that which, if answered, would tend to subject him to any punishment, penalty, forfeiture, ... 'no one is bound to criminate himself'.

This was not always the law in the case of civil contempt. In the days of Sir William Blackstone, 200 years ago, civil contempt was an exception to the general principle. In those days a plaintiff was entitled to deliver interrogatories to the defendant, which the defendant was bound to answer on oath. In his Commentaries (8th Ed) 1778 Book 4, p 287, Sir William said that 'this method, of making the defendant answer upon oath to a criminal charge, is not agreeable to the genius of the common law in any other instance'; and he went on to say, at p. 288, that 'by long and immemorial usage [it] has now become the law of the land.'

I am prepared to accept that such a rule did exist in the days of Sir William Blackstone. But I do not think it exists any longer today. The genius of the common law has prevailed. I hold that a man who is charged with contempt of court cannot be compelled to answer interrogatories or to give evidence himself to make him prove his guilt. I reject the submission that the defendant is a compellable witness in the contempt proceedings against him.

[12] Consequently, I hold that the second and fourth Respondents are not compellable witnesses in this contempt proceedings, unless they choose to do so, as happened in Dr Leela Ratos & Ors v Anthony Ratos [1997] 1 MLJ 704. In any event, I am of the considered view that to allow the petitioner to cross-examine the respondents on encl 182A or any of the previous affidavits would operate unfairly and would be prejudicial against the alleged contemnor as it would be difficult to restrict such cross-examination to only the circumstances of the committal hearing so as to ensure that such exercise would not be for a collateral purpose. Unrestricted cross-examination would have little relevance to the petitioner's allegations of contempt and would be severely prejudicial to the said respondents since it would lead to an examination of the whole circumstance of the petition itself. In the Comet Products, the UK Court of Appeal disallowed cross-examination of the contemnor because the cross-examination could not be limited to the circumstances of the committal hearing, but would have led to an investigation of the whole circumstances of the original action. Therein Lord Denning MR had also observed in the following lucid language:

It is to be remembered that this power to cross-examine is a matter for the discretion of the judge who is trying the case. If the cross-examination could be limited to the particular circumstances of this alleged contempt, then it might be right to permit it. But in the course of the discussion, and particularly that of this morning, it has become plain that the plaintiffs, through their advisers, desire a much wider cross-examination than that ...

- A It seems to me that such a claim to cross-examine does mean that he will be investigating the whole of the circumstances of the defendant, including the circumstances leading to the original action. However much he may disclaim it, it seems to me plain that Mr. Sparrow [counsel for the applicant], if he were to cross-examine, would claim to investigate the defendant's state of mind from the beginning, and to cross-examine as to credit, as to character and so forth, all the way along the line ...
- B The common law would not wish him to be cross-examined in the way that is suggested. Such a cross-examination would range over the whole of his state of mind on other occasions and in other circumstances, whereas the one issue is whether there has been a passing off of this red carton. If this cross-examination were to be pursued, I can see question after question put, and objection after objection raised, extending over a long time. I do not think that would be appropriate in what in effect is a criminal charge. Therefore as a matter of discretion, as it is, the cross-examination ought not to be allowed.
- C
- D [13] Lord Cross (at p 77 of the same judgment), also held that cross-examination should not be allowed where it is directed to a collateral purpose or where it might operate unfairly against the alleged contemnor:
- E Presumably he intended to invite the court to infer that if Mr Hawkins had a 'guilty' mind initially, his state of mind had not changed after the injunction was granted. Evidence of Mr Hawkins' original state of mind would have little or no bearing on the issue in the motion but admissions extracted in cross-examination might well assist the plaintiffs in the action. So the cross-examination would be largely directed to a collateral purpose. Moreover one must bear in mind that even civil contempt has a quasi criminal aspect. The projected cross-examination might well operate unfairly to Mr Hawkins and I agree with my Lords that it should not be allowed.
- F [14] The petitioner's application for cross-examination does not sufficiently define or limit the scope of the cross-examination. From the written submission of counsel for the petitioner it also appears probable that the petitioner will take advantage of this proposed cross-examination to fish for evidence to support his principal non-contempt applications such as encls 1 and 10. This makes it very likely that the proposed cross-examination will lead to an investigation of the whole of the circumstances of the re-amended petition, and if this happens the cross-examination will be for a collateral purpose.
- G
- H [15] This court should exercise its discretion against allowing cross-examination given the following circumstances of the present case. The petitioner's allegations of perjury concern allegations of diversion of business opportunity, non-disclosure, and a share dilution scheme, which are matters to be investigated in the re-amended petition (encl 149) and the petitioner's application for receivers and managers (encl 10). Furthermore, the allegation of non-disclosure is the subject of the petitioner's discovery applications (encls 164 and 171).
- I [16] In any event, even if the ratio in Comet Products is not followed in respect of the contempt affidavits, this court should nevertheless exercise extreme caution in the conduct of these committal proceedings lest the respondents' rights to a fair hearing are impeded. And hence, the petitioner must show a greater necessity and stronger grounds for cross-examining the respondents in these committal proceedings than is normally required to cross-examine deponents in ordinary applications. This is simply because the consequences in these committal proceedings for the respondents are very serious. The allegation of perjury is an allegation of criminal contempt. The respondents are facing the possibility of imprisonment. Lord Denning commented on this issue in Comet Products. He said:

Although this is a civil contempt, it partakes of the nature of a criminal charge. The defendant is liable to be punished for it. He may be sent to prison. The rules as to criminal charges have always been applied to such a proceeding.

[17] It is inevitable that cross-examination of the respondents will lead to an exploration beyond the circumstances of the committal application to the whole circumstances of the re-amended petition and other interlocutory applications in this suit. I am of the view that a 'preliminary hearing' on all the facts and circumstances of this petition will greatly prejudice the respondents when the same is tried. It is unjust to allow the petitioner to have two bites of the cherry. The submission that the said respondents are compellable witnesses in the contempt proceedings against them has, in justice, to be rejected. This court has to be mindful that the Comet Products UK Ltd the applicant had sought, and was refused, leave to cross-examine the respondent on his affidavit to establish civil contempt for his willful disobedience of an injunction order of court, whereas in the case at hand the petitioner here has sought leave to cross-examine the said respondents on encl 182A as well as the previous affidavits filed by them upon a charge of criminal contempt due to alleged falsities deposed in the affidavits. Such application which pertains to contents of an affidavit is a very novel application even in English or other Commonwealth jurisdictions. Thus, counsel for the Petitioner did not cite any case authority from such jurisdictions which deals with an application for leave pertaining to contents of affidavits such as now before me.

[18] There are further compelling reasons why this court should disallow leave to cross-examine.

- (1) The cross-examination, if allowed, will result in the extended hearing of the committal application. The hearing will be further protracted as the respondents' counsel will take repeated objections to irrelevant or inappropriate cross-examination. Thus, most importantly, if leave is allowed it would lead to an inordinate delay of the trial of encl 1.
- (2) Cross-examination is not essential as the facts and circumstances in these allegations of contempt add little weight to the issues that have to be decided at the committal hearing. As can be seen from the parties' affidavits, there are no major disputes as to facts and circumstances. The committal hearing by and large involves disputes on points of law.
- (3) Cross-examination of the respondents will also result in unnecessary cost, expense and delay. In particular, the fourth respondent is resident in Taipei, to Kuala Lumpur at least twice (assuming that there are no postponements) being once for the contempt proceedings and once for the trial of encl 1.
- (4) The respondents when faced with the petitioner's application for committal had to file the contempt affidavit [encl 182A] in opposition. The petitioner

- A alleged contempt on the basis that the six previous affidavits contain false and misleading statements. The respondents filed the contempt affidavit [encl 182A] in reply, as omitting to do so would have amounted to an admission of the petitioner's allegations. Further, by cross-examining the respondents on the contempt affidavit, the petitioner will require this Court to decide on issues raised in the six previous affidavits prior to the hearing of the respective applications in respect of which they were filed. This predetermination of the issues will be prejudicial to the respondents, and is akin to placing the cart before the horse.
- B

- C [19] Consequently, I further hold that to allow cross-examination would operate unfairly and would be prejudicial to the said respondents.

- D [20] Even should I be wrong to treat the said previous affidavits as 'contempt affidavits', or be amiss on the law on the contempt affidavit (encl 182A) and this court is clothed with a discretion — to be exercised upon the more liberal guidelines as in non-contempt affidavits — to compel the second and fourth respondents to submit themselves for cross-examination, I would nevertheless hold that such discretion ought not to be exercised if the petitioner has not met the guidelines set out in Indrani Rajaratnam & Ors v Fairview Schools Bhd in respect of non-contempt affidavits.

- E [21] The guidelines and the conditions to be met, which the court should address itself when considering whether to allow leave to cross-examine on non-contempt affidavits, has been lucidly and cogently set out, in Indrani by Siti Norma Yaakob JCA and KC Vohrah J (as they were then). Her Ladyship Siti Norma Yaakob JCA had this to say:
- F

- G That the appellants never identified the issues for which they maintain cross-examination had become necessary. This is not surprising as no formal application was made by them. Even so a perusal of the proceedings recorded by the trial judge fails to disclose what the issues are to warrant cross-examination. Apart from stating orally that the respondent's many affidavits by various deponents raise many disputes as to facts, such disputes have not been identified by the appellants. If indeed there are factual disputes, the appellants have also failed to show whether they are relevant to the petition to warrant cross-examination. On the contrary the learned trial judge found that the cross-examination would not advance the cause of justice as there is sufficient affidavit evidence supported by contemporaneous documents to enable the petition to be heard properly without the need of cross-examination.

- H KC Vohrah J also considered this point and held:

- I There was confusion as to what the purpose of the proposed cross-examination was for, there being no attempt to show what was needed to be adduced under the proposed cross-examination of the affiants. The learned counsel for the petitioners predicated his oral application on the vague ground that there were so many disputes as to facts that the court would not be able to know what was disputed merely by reading the affidavits.

It is important to take into account all factors when considering an application for cross-examination and if it has little relevance or little weight to the issue which the judge has to decide, then cross-examination should not be permitted. As was reminded by Megaw LJ in Comet Products v Hawtex Plastics [1971] 1 All ER 1145 at pp 1146–1147...

It will be noted that in a local case, Leisure & Allied Industries Pty Ltd v Udaria Sdn Bhd [1980] 1 MLJ 189, Salleh Abas FJ (as he then was) when dealing with an application by the defendant to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses on their affidavits took the same view and proceeded to 'see how the proposed cross-examination would be relevant to the issue' in the plaintiff's application in order for him to exercise his discretion.'

[22] On the question whether the applicant has met the guidelines laid out in Indrani, I make the following adverse observations that militates against the petitioner's case. His application for cross-examination does not identify the issues for which the petitioner alleges cross-examination is necessary. In his application, the petitioner says that he 'disputes and or challenges' the respondents' affidavits, and that there are 'contradictions' between the affidavits, and the said respondents' explanations are 'bare statements'. However, the petitioner does not in his application or in his affidavit in support (encl 185) elaborate any further, or refer to specific paragraphs in the said respondents' affidavits or to specific documents. The petitioner, in (encl 185) gives other ambiguous and indefinite reasons for wanting to cross-examine the said respondents, but has not explained in reasonable detail or stated his basis for requiring cross-examination. For example, the petitioner claims that the said respondents' explanations are 'not substantiated when tested against contemporaneous evidence' but fails to state the precise nature of the 'contemporaneous evidence'.

E

[23] Further, I am inclined to the view that the said respondents have, in their affidavits encls 182A, 183 and 187 provided detailed and plausible explanations of the alleged contemptuous statements. In this regard, the petitioner has chosen not to address any of the explanations or evidence put forward by the said respondents. The petitioner's affidavit encl 185 does not address the said respondents' explanations despite being prepared and affirmed after encls 182A and 183. It is also to be noted that the petitioner has not filed any affidavit in reply to the second respondent's affidavit affirmed on 14 July 2006 (encl 187). Though it is clear that the petitioner is disputing certain facts, yet he has failed to show how these disputes are relevant to the committal application. Accordingly, the purpose of the proposed cross-examination remains questionable. In order to prove perjury, the petitioner must first of all prove that the alleged contemptuous statements are in fact false and misleading and he must discharge this burden of proof on the affidavit and documentary evidence that is already available and which has been referred to by him. The petitioner cannot simply level allegations against the said respondents and then attempt to elicit oral evidence by compelling the said respondents to disprove his allegations.

F

H

[24] The petitioner has, in his application for leave to cross-examine, given the following purported reasons for cross-examination: (a) to elicit an explanation on the alleged contradictory statements given; (b) to effectively determine the said respondents' true motives and reasons for the contradicting statements made; and, (c) to test the said respondents' oral evidence against the evidence that is before the court. These purported reasons have, in my view, unwittingly revealed that the petitioner's true purpose is to fish for oral evidence from the said respondents to support his petition in encl 1 and his other Enclosures. This view is further supported

I

- A by the fact that the petitioner's issues for cross-examination are vague and ambiguous. To support the suggestion that the privilege of self incrimination could not be invoked the petitioner referred to Rice v Gordon [1843] 60 ER 225 which was a case decided in 1843, about 130 years before Comet Products. This case is not relevant as its facts are substantially different from the present case. Rice v Gordon concerned
- B an application by the plaintiff for the production of documents to support a charge of perjury committed in the main cause in which the defendant had admitted that he had custody of but contended that he should not be compelled to produce the documents because they tended to support the indictment. The court quite rightly held that if it should refuse the motion for production it would be holding out an inducement to the defendant to commit perjury in the early stage of the cause and
- C prevent the court from administering justice in the suit. This is in contrast to the present application which is for cross-examination on affidavits with the view to securing a committal for contempt.

- D [25] The court should be slow to allow the cross-examination of the respondents on the grounds that the affidavits filed in interlocutory proceedings allegedly contain misleading information. This is because such a decision would set a dangerous precedent for our courts by opening the floodgates for similar strategies to be adopted by litigants even in cases such as urgent injunction applications. Surely, to condone or to approve of this strategy would severely impair the court's viability in the administration of justice. Hundreds of affidavits are filed in our courts everyday, most
- E of which contain statements of facts which are in dispute. If litigants could file motions for contempt founded on contents of affidavits and then allowed to cross-examine the deponent on such affidavits, our courts would be bogged down with contempt proceedings rather than have the true and substantial relief sought litigated. Consequently, for all the compelling reasons above, the application of the
- F petitioner in encl 186 has to be and is dismissed with costs to the said respondents in any event.

IN POSTLUDE

- G [26] Even after my decision on encl 186, where I had refused leave, encl 178 has still to be heard as it remains extant, though this court has to be mindful that the petitioner has every right to pursue encl 178 to the very end. Thus, 8 May 2007 has been fixed for hearing of the contempt application (encl 178) as there is every indication that the same would be pursued. I think it is in the interest of all parties that the main purpose of the above petition should be dealt with without any further
- H delay. Indeed, and I have also fixed a time line for the respective parties to put in their written submissions.

Application dismissed.
